NEW SECTION: LETTERS

We are willing to publish short communications (Letters) on work in progress, concern over theoretical issues, interpretation of published data, or the desirability of research along certain new lines. Letters accepted for publication will be printed as space permits. Twenty free reprints will be sent to the author.

Format rules for letters are the same as for articles; see Notes for Contributors in a recent issue of the journal. The total length permitted, however, is four printed pages, including figures, tables and references. If, for the sake of example, we assume no figures or tables, this is equivalent to about eight double-spaced type-written pages on standard-size paper (8½ × 11 inches [22 × 28 cm]).

Let me seize this opportunity to inform our readers and contributors that at present our publication lag is very short. We are able to send manuscripts out for review — usually to no more than one or two outside readers — immediately after their arrival in our office. Currently, papers accepted for publication are being scheduled for the next issue to appear or, if the deadline for that issue has passed, the following issue.

I should like to remind contributors to look carefully at our Notes for Contributors before submitting manuscripts. Since these Notes are brief, when in doubt about something, it pays to glance at applications of these rules in recent articles. Much time is often lost by authors and me over such matters after a paper has otherwise been deemed worthy of publication. One common difficulty is the failure of authors to make sure that there is complete agreement as to number of items and dates of publication between all citations in the text and all sources listed under References.
